Stories are presented that illustrate rationale, "hard" and "good enough" leadership. "Good enough" leadership is characterised by values of openness, inclusiveness, transparency, collaboration, mutual trust, and mutual respect. The "good enough" leader attempts to create a playful, while serious, space in which new ideas and solutions may emerge. "Good enough" leadership can be decisive without being top-down, command and control, and often brutal. At the Graduation Thesis there is offered some ideas about what a programme in teaching and training "good enough" leaders might look like. Psychoanalytic perspectives on leadership. Chapter 1. October 2016 with 176 Reads. How we measure 'reads'. Psychoanalysis in general and the psychoanalytical perspective on leadership in particular belong to the approaches challenging the long-standing dominance of the rationality of man's doing by underlining the unconscious processes framing organizations, leadership, leaders and subordinates. This contribution shows that these observations also apply to the relations between the young [Show full abstract] Federal Republic and its small Benelux neighbours. We conclude that a tailored approach to destructive leadership, whether in research or practice, seems necessary, as diverse types of destructive leader behaviors affect employees differentially.
