The advent of iron The use of iron had amazing repercussions. First, it changed trade and fostered local independence.Â Celtic warriors would cut off the heads of their enemies in battle and display them as trophies. They mounted heads in doorposts and hung them from their belts. This might seem barbaric to us, but to the Celt the seat of spiritual power was the head, so by taking the head of a vanquished foe they were appropriating that power for themselves. It was a kind of bloody religious observance. Julian Cope on Celts: Art and Identity at the British Museum â€” video. 8:53. Karachi Under British Raj Rare Video Old Karachi. 8:53. The Celts didn't write down any events. The Greeks were the first to mention the British Isles. In the 1st century BC when the Romans came to Britain the Celts lived in tribes and obeyed chiefs. They had no towns, they cultivated crops, wore wooden clothes, and kept large herds of cattle and sheep. France (known as Gaul) was entirely Celtic and Britain too became one of the Celtic strongholds as Rome advanced through Gaul. England was a centre for culture and education and the sons of Goulish chiefs were sent there for instruction by the druids, the priests of the Celts. The Celts were renowned for their eloquence and their poetry, to such an extent that a poet was held in much greater esteem than a common priest. The bards accompanied their ballads on a type of lyre.
