World War II is the first well-documented war, and there are a ton of documentaries describing the facts of the battles, including footage shot there. I have watched dozens of these, and it is not the stats on weapons, the strategic maneuvers, or the sheer scope of countries and people involved that I find compelling. From these war dispatches it is easy to see why Pyle was so well liked and respected. His writing was simple and straight forward and though he was generally perceived as the voice of the front line infantry soldier, he always stressed that the war effort was a team effort with everyone contributing as best as they could.
