Brown recommends flower-watching hikes in the lower elevations in the south part of the park, like the Bajada Nature Trail. Two other nearby delights will include wildflower-rich Shell Creek Road, near Santa Margarita, where orange poppies and blue-purple sky lupine blanket the roadside; and San Luis Obispo's Montaña de Oro State Park, which blooms with masses of California poppies, sticky monkey flowers, wild radish, and mustard, all along its easy-access Bluff Trail. Hike the Chumash Trail uphill from Pacific Coast Highway: in the lower stretches, you'll see poppies, lupine, and mariposa lilies, while up higher you'll find the more exotic chocolate lily and blue globe gilia. Sierra Foothills. Peak season: mid-March through late April. Following publication of his encyclopedic classic, Wild Flowers of the Pacific Northwest, the late Lewis Clark broke his massive masterwork down into six compact and affordable field guides organized by habitat. Collectively, they sold over 200,000 copies. Thoroughly redesigned and updated under the direction of Clark's collaborator John Trelawny, this new edition revives one of the most popular guides in the series. Wild Flowers of the Sea Coast offers descriptions, diagrams and surprisingly large colour photos of almost 100 flowering plants of the coastal region stretching from northern
