All teachers need to learn how to teach students with behavior problems. No matter if the child is one student in a classroom with a concern or if the classroom is designed for children with these complex behavioral issues, the methods to teaching and avoiding complications or outbursts are sometimes the same. When teachers learn how to avoid situations that can push the button on these children, it is possible to ensure the classroom's lesson plan is fully explored and all students get equal attention. One of the best strategies for teaching in an environment like this is to learn methods that help to prevent the occurrence of behavioral issues. While every student's needs are different, there are some simple steps teachers can take to help prevent problems as a group. Strategy instruction teaches students about strategies, teaches them how and when to use strategies, helps students identify personally effective strategies, and encourages them to make strategic behaviors a systematic part of their learning. Now start the video. Listen to the introduction. Complete the guided observation and reflection tasks for each of the video segments. The next part of the manual is for trainees and is available on separate pages for ease of copying. Page 68 Shaping the Way We Teach English.
