Judy Carne, a sprightly British actress and comedian who rocketed to pop culture fame as the "sock it to me" girl on "Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In," a landmark of television zaniness, before her career was derailed by drug arrests and a near-fatal automobile accident, died on Thursday in Northampton, England. She was 76. The probable cause was pneumonia, said a friend, Jon Barrett, who said Ms. Carne had been in the hospital for several days and that the official death certificate was not yet available. After starting her career in England and building a résumé of appearances onstage, on tele She detailed their relationship, confessing to partaking in several affairs and struggling with drug addiction, in her 1985 autobiography "Laughing on the Outside, Crying on the Inside: The Bittersweet Saga of the Sock-It-To-Me Girl." She battled heavily with drug addiction after leaving "Laugh-In," being charged with heroin possession and prescription forgery in the late '70s. She was acquitted of the heroin charge.Â Carne went on to serve as a panelist on "Juke Box Jury" and also appeared on sitcom "The Rag Trade," as well as the 1962 comedy film "A Pair of Briefs." Her other TV credits include a regular role in sitcom "Fair Exchange," "The Baileys of Balboa," a starring role in sitcom "Love on a Rooftop" and appearances in "The Man From U.N.C.L.E."
