At Ebla, at least 1000 years before even fundamentalists believe Exodus was composed, Ya appears as a complete form of the name. Our knowledge of Biblical Hebrew and our understanding of once vague passages now have support from another Semitic language. Many of these passages are detailed in the Afterward which was written by Mitchell Dahood. Ebla's relationship to Canaan involves more than a shared ceramics culture. however, and embraces a period much earlier than that of the Amorite/patriarchal movement and settlement there. Pettinato draws attention to texts from the "archival period" (ca. 2500 BC.) which contain itineraries, lexical lists, commodities transactions, and similar information and which mention Canaan and Canaanite cities. 6 Paolo Matthiae, Ebla: An Empire Rediscovered. trans, Christopher Holme.
