No platform for fascism: A Q&A with Antifa author Mark Bray. With the book hitting stores this fall, L. Scribe. African-American folklore was Zora Neale Hurston's first love. Collected in the late 1920's Every Tongue Got to Confess, from the celebrated author of Their Eyes Were Watching God, is published here for the first time, beautifully performed by Ruby Dee and Ossie Davis. Hilarious, bittersweet, and often saucy, these folk-tales provide a verdant slice of African-American life in the rural South at the turn of the twentieth century. These folk-tales reflect the joys and sorrows of the African-American experience, celebrate the redemptive power of storytelling, and showcase the continuous presence in America of an Africanized language that flourishes to this day. Performed by Ruby Dee and Ossie Davis. Sprache: English Kategorie: Romane Übersetzer

This was a series of folktales and folk stories, recorded just as told to ZNH, complete with the names of the people who told the stories. The book was divided by subject matter--God tales, Devil tales, Tall tales, etc., plus a fairly large miscellaneous section. They were great! As usual w/ZNH's stuff, you get a real sense of cadence and speech patterns, which I love. The mood of the stories was all over the place; lots of funny ones, some raunchy ones, some sharp ones, some sad ones.Â The Amazon description attached to this book here on LT is for a different volume entirely, [Every Tongue Got to Confess].
