Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS) is a fatal transmissible disease of the immune system caused by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). HIV slowly attacks and destroys the immune system, the body's defence against infection, leaving an individual vulnerable to a variety of other infections. AIDS is the final stage of HIV infection (Encyclopaedia Britannica 2003; Barnett and. Less developed countries (LDCs) have made impressive progress in human HIV/AIDS-related stigma and discrimination builds upon, and reinforces, existing prejudices

Transcription. 1 scaling up Youth HIV/AIDS Prevention The Experience of Pathfinder International and the Foundation for Community Development in Inhambane Province, Mozambique December 2004. 2 Linda Casey Julio Pacca Rita Badiani Pathfinder International Mozambique Av. do Zimbabwe, 830 Tel/Fax: Maputo, Mozambique Copyright: Pathfinder International, 2004. Knowledge about HIV transmission and AIDS is relatively high among youth in Mozambique, and this was confirmed by the project's own KAP study that was conducted in 2004, but there are still gaps in knowledge, and transforming knowledge into preventive behavior is an ongoing challenge. The STEPs initiative assists local HIV/AIDS committees with community mobilization and capacity building so that communities become empowered to act collectively to address their own problems. Background. In Malawi, HIV/AIDS accounts for 70 percent of all hospital admissions, and for the recent drop in life expectancy of parents and other adults from 43 to 39 years. Most of these programs have been small in scope, and experiences with scaling up have been limited. The STEPs program is the notable exception. By end of its second phase (1997-2002), STEPs had scaled up to more than 300 communities in four districts, covering. Scaling up is a multi-dimensional process through which the impact of a community-driven programs is broadened and deepened. Scaling Up Care and Support: Horizons/YRG CARE Study, workshop report.
