global environmental change past present and future

Press Release UNEP/112. State of environment: past, present, future? Hard Facts: Tough Choices as UNEP Launches Global Environment Outlook-3. Under one future scenario, hunger declines to as little as 2.5 per cent of the global population by 2032 -- in line with the United Nations Millennium Development Goals. Concerted action involving governments, industry and individual citizens could also deliver deep cuts in emissions of the gases linked with global warming. GEO-3 concludes that a great deal of environmental change has already taken place in the past 30 years since the 1972 Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment, which led to the creation of UNEP. Global warming is progressing, and the possible outcome for the future of humans, plants and animals is not clear. Climate change is a problem. Climate change is the direct result of global warming. Climate change affects all: people, plants, and animals. We as people need to display and teach the next generation the choices we all have, to live cleaner, healthier, and longer by keeping our environment and atmosphere clean. Global warming is undeniably an ethical issue, and we must face it as such. The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) plays a significant role in helping the Federal government reduce greenhouse gas emissions and greenhouse gas intensity.
