Sex and Gender. Sexism in Higher Education. Sexism in the Workplace. Sexism in education is clearly associated with sexism in the workplace. When women are expected to "stay in the home," they are unable to access the necessary educational resources to compete with men in the job market. If by chance they are able to secure a position, women may be less prepared educationally for the task, and thus draw lower wages. In recent decades more women have entered the United States workforce. After WWII (from about 1947), about 30 percent of women were employed outside the home; today, at the start of the 21st century, the figure is well over 50 percent. i work with this girl, we are and have been physically attracted but she's hung up about working together. how can i get "in" given the circumstances? i need a strategy.
