Our public diplomacy approaches and applications are inconsistent with the realities of today's international environment. The purpose of this course is to study the theories and practices of public diplomacy and political warfare as instruments of statecraft, with an emphasis on psychological strategy. The objective of the course is to help prepare the student to integrate public diplomacy and strategic influence with other tools—traditional diplomacy, foreign aid, intelligence collection and covert operations, and military and economic foreign policy—and to condition the student to approach the issue with confidence. Please note: We recommend that students take Foreign Propaganda, Perceptions and Policy (IWP 631) and Political Warfare: Past, Present and Future (IWP 641) before taking IWP 637. Professor.
